ANNIE-ROSE LONDON

Jewish Social Justice Roundtable

The world I long for looks like....

everyone has a sense of belonging. everyone is aware of their ancestors and does the work that is their's to do, with a lens of equity and redistribution and empowerment and healing, because the sense of interconnection is so strong that it is non-negotiable that eachother's liberation is our own liberation and vice-versa. Earth, plants and animals are respected as beings. All borders are blurry, not through confusion but through magic and paradox. Resources are blessed and celebrated. Art and creativity is owned by no one. A sense of universal belonging to the universe is omnipresent, though difference and diversity is cherished and drawn out in fabulous expressions of culture and identity.

... a revolution of values that centers the collective good... where earth and all beings are able to live in wholeness, peace, safety, dignity, sufficiency, reverence, creative fulfillment, love, and joy...

What social movements are you most connected to?

Movements for liberation and wholeness... My life and work centers the intersection of spirituality, social justice, and healing (both personal & collective). In the last 10-15 years this has come to be called Healing Justice, but the work long precedes the title. I still get out in the streets sometimes -- mostly related to racial justice issues (which are deeply entwined with so many other issues) -- but now find my primary contributions to Movement work in supporting the well-being and sustainability of folks on the front lines. // In the late 1970s-1990s i was active in the LGBTQ movement.

The world I long for looks like....

is a space where people of color (particular QT/WOC) are free to reject the cultural scripts that capitalism/white supremacy/patriarchy tell us we need to follow in order to be "whole," "worthy," "good," and "safe." The world I long for is able to acknowledge the wounds of oppression as real traumas and that we could see out forms of healing that honor our experiences and ways of being. The world I long for looks like religious spaces being a source of hope and social transformation and yet also freely encourages people to leave those environments if and when their spiritual growth requires a departure from institutions that once nurtured them but no longer do so. The world I long for is both particular and universal, seeing and honoring our differences and still believing that deep cross-identity connections are possible and valuable.
